Historic pipe organ built by John G. Marklove, Utica, New York, circa 1872, and located in the former St. Mary of the Assumption Roman Catholic Church, Cleveland, New York. Pipe organ supposedly “rebuilt” by C. E. Morey in 1930—perhaps the instrument was installed at St. Mary’s at that time, with an alteration in the winding system (there is no sign of the hand-pumping mechanism that would have been original to the organ). Cone-tuned pipes had been fitted with tuning sleeves. Otherwise, the organ is in original condition.

The instrument is a two-manual (58 note compass) and pedal (27 note compass) mechanical action instrument, situated in a simple but attractive chestnut case. The instrument was completely restored, in an historical manner, according to the guidelines established by the Organ Historical Society, in 1992. This included a releathering of the double-rise reservoir bellows, replacement of leather linkages and other deteriorated parts, repairs and adjustments to the mechanical action.

The specification of the instrument is as follows:

GREAT	SWELL	PEDAL
